		This lovely scene of Briar Patch in Winter, clearly shows its stages of development. On the left is the original stone cottage which was later joined onto the large mansion to the right. The covered veranda, which in the summer holds wicker rockers and pots of scarlet geraniums, was added after the Civil War.	vc_0014_f07_001	VC0014

		A collection of China plates captures attention in the hallway where the polished pine ceiling (once the floor of the hay loft) leads to the master suite.	vc_0014_f20_005	VC0014
		Wrought iron tongs, once used to haul hay up to the attic, still hang on the side wall of the Dairy Barn.	vc_0014_f20_006	VC0014
		A cornerstone of the rugged barn built by Bolling Haxell bears the date 1880.	vc_0014_f20_007	VC0014
		Surely the most unusual feature of the home known as the Dairy Barn is the stream which flows underneath and cools it in the summer.	vc_0014_f20_008	VC0014

		This photo of the Log Cabin at Exning clearly shows its three sections spanning three centuries: the original Peyton structure with its two chimneys in the 1750's is centered; the addition of the Gibsons in the early 1800's stands to the left; while the 20th century log cabin addition of the Chapmans appears on the right.	vc_0014_f21_001	VC0014
		Hugh Smith, owner of the Log cabin from 1820 to 1859, was a "Physician, Lawyer and Shopkeeper" according to the 1920 census. He and his wife, Elizabeth Jones, raised twelve children in the Log Cabin.	vc_0014_f21_002	VC0014
		By 1965, when Anne Haxell Dudley sold the property to Bart Sallinger, the Log Cabin had clearly seen better days. The "Great Room" is the jewel of the Log Cabin. It offers two marvelous conversation areas where old fireplace mantles provide wonderful background for the Chapman's collection of old Pewter and Scottie Chapman's paintings. The ceiling is supported by huge poplar beams dating from the 1750's and the walls are partially wood paneled from the barn at Old Welbourne. Fortunately, the north end still exhibits its early log and mortar constuction.	vc_0014_f21_003	VC0014
